This course will provide the Law Enforcement Officer (LEO)/Instructor with the skills necessary to effectively instruct new basic officers all the way up to tactical teams, as a good team is one that does the basics well, to apply tactics in a multitude of incidents. It covers tactically transitioning between evolving or changing problems. This course was designed around core philosophies and principals that can be applied in incidents from mere contacts and open door calls all the way up to active shooter situations, barricaded subjects, hostage situations, suicide/homicide bombers and warrant services. These incidents are not inclusive of all tactical considerations; however the tactics can be used to handle most incidents. Furthermore, our program has been developed based on actual situations and non-traditional approaches. Situations have evolved and the tactics have been modified, therefore it is critical that the LEO/Instructor understand these concepts and have the skills and ability to apply effective tactics when necessary.

The concepts, principles and drills taught in this program will give the LEO/Instructor the greatest chance for winning and operating tactically in various environments or situations. This program covers: Use of Force, weapons handling to include tactical transitions and deployment of long guns, individual/team movement, 360-degree security concept, cornering, danger areas, cover management, cover to cover movement, contact/cover, securing visible weapons, door entries, room clearing/multiple rooms, hallways/elevators/stairs/ladders, vehicle take downs/assaults, and pinning a mobile opponent. This course also covers policy writing and considerations, instructor methodology, critical philosophies and concepts for tactics, how to set up in-service training and constraints such as time, money, facilities and other common problems. This course is 95% hands on and the EO's/Instructor will leave with a greater understanding and ability to effectively apply tactics and instruct others in a multitude of incidents as well as tactically transitioning between evolving or changing problems.
