

THE DIAGNOSTIC FIREARMS INSTRUCTOR WORKSHOP (AUGUST 1-4, 2012)

This course is designed specifically for current firearms instructors, especially those who are tasked with fixing shooters. However, the DFIW is guaranteed to increase any shooters understanding of the how and whys of shooting performance. Materials for this course are founded in real life application and pass on years of valuable information regarding self diagnosis, diagnosis of others and the remediation of shooters. Topics covered are: instructor/student attitudes, successful motor programming, remedial training drills, confidence building drills, target diagnosis, training tips, techniques and shooter remediation plans in both classroom and hands-on live fire instruction. Attendees will have a vastly greater knowledge and understanding for how to obtain speed, precision and combat accuracy from themselves and their students. You will no longer wonder why you or any shooter is failing to perform after attending this training. Course Length: 4 days (32 hours)

ABOUT CHRIS CERINO

Chris is an internationally known firearms instructor and shooting competitor who has been training law enforcement officers, military operators and civilians for more than 10 years. He has served in a variety of positions from municipal and county to state and federal agencies spanning 19 years. A majority of those years have been, and continue to be, dedicated to tactical and firearms related fields.

His instructional skills are founded in life experience, both the good and the bad. Experience has given him a priceless education which he has used to train thousands of shooters. His time spent with the TSA and the Ohio Peace officer Training Academy accounts for the past ten years which have kept him literally immersed in tactics and firearms training. A large portion of this is the time he has spent remediating shooters. Finding new ways to gain competence and confidence from shooters required to adhere to strict operational standards is what made Chris the shooter and instructor he is today.

Currently an Ohio Peace Officer and tactical response team member he is continually applying and teaching tactics, and weapons classes from operator to instructor levels. A self described “out of the box” shooter Chris teaches the importance of fundamentals in a “do as I do” fashion that has resulted in him to being a respected instructor and competitor across the nation.

Chris instructs at the national level being hosted by sportsmen’s clubs and police agencies nationwide. He also instructs at the international level through organizations such as IALEFI (International Association of Law Enforcement Firearms Instructors), ILEETA (International Law Enforcement Educators & Trainers Association) and TREVPO (Tactical Resource Exposition). A published writer, Chris writes on the topics of firearms training and instruction. He is currently a contributing columnist for The Gun Mag and Police One online magazine which is viewed by hundreds of thousands of men and women in the criminal justice field worldwide.

Continually pursuing validation of his own skills and the skills he teaches Chris is a member of Team FNH USA competing in three gun challenges, precision rifle matches and NRA action pistol matches across the country, including the coveted Bianchi Cup.

These real world operations and competition skills are what he brings to you through this very personalized training.
