

The Detective Work Shop

May 20-21, 2015
Training Location

Kirkland PD

11750 NE 118th St

Kirkland, WA 98034-7114

TOPICS COVERED

- Professional vs. Unprofessional
- The Be-Know-Attributes of Leadership
- The Detectives' Toolbox
- 3 ways people process information
- Eye accessing cues and behavioral baselines
- Rapport (Practical Exercise)
- The delivery of the Miranda Warning (Practical Exercise)
- Question types to elicit admissions
- Handling denials and the reasons people deny
- Advance evidence and theme presentation
- Countering interviewee questions
- Theories and methods of interrogations
- Subject elimination interviews
- Preparing investigative notes
- Preparing investigative supplements
- Drafting legal documents
- Preparing prosecution reports

Course Overview

Law Enforcement is a complex business that is changing daily. Officers must be committed and focused. Most Officers have an idea of their career path and what their goals are. Most agencies offer a wide area of specialized units for officers to work. Some choose to enter a specialized unit, perfect their skill level and remain there until they promote, transfer or retire. The reality is, that it takes years to perfect a certain skill level in any job. Officers from time to time will accept an assignment as a detective for a brief period of time and assume that they have perfected the necessary skills to move on or to supervise a similar unit. Unfortunately, agencies all around the country are experiencing this problem and many have failed to address it.

There are agencies around the country that rotate Detectives back to uniform patrol every five years. It's a known fact that with most serious offenses, it takes approximately one year for a case to go to trial. If a new detective filed (10) cases in a year, then he or she will not receive the benefit of the court experience associated with the case until the upcoming year. Uniform Officers, who are assigned to patrol units and are planning their future, often find themselves interviewing for investigative positions with nothing to offer.

This is a two day intensive training course. Each day will consist of lecture and practical exercises. Day one will consist of lecture, focusing on the person and terms associated with investigative work. Day one will also consist of assessing the Detectives toolbox, Interviewing and Interrogation techniques, and delivery of Miranda Warnings. Day two will consist of preparing various forms of documentation and official forms associated with investigative work. The overall goal of the course is to familiarize the student with the responsibilities of an investigator. The course is design to allow the student to participate over the course of two days and to arm themselves with workable tools that will assist them in the field of investigative work.

Tuition

$189 per Officer

$165 Discount applies if 5 or more register at once

For registration information visit our website at:

www.pletraining.com