

I have 1 other resident that has a family member, but she can't afford to buy him his clothing and other personal items, so depends on me. I purchased him a TV last year when he moved in and I also bought him a new bed. He has lots of friends and was on the phone a lot, so I added him to my family plan.

The other 3 residents have no family around. I purchase all of their personal hygiene items and their shoes and all their clothing. I have 2 residents that take vitamins daily and I also purchase these for them so they don't have to spend their money.

These are an example of just a few things that I have done for my residents. Although I thought I had permission from the residents for using a few briefs I understand how it could be interpreted as exploitation without the permission. I do not and will not put any of the residents at risk for being exploited.
